DETAILED ACTION

1. Claims 1-9 are pending.

Specification

The disclosure is objected to because of the following informalities: the first paragraph should be corrected with the appropriate application numbers and filing dates.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-2 and 7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Tanaka (US 5029208), and further in view of Doonan et al (US 6807277).

As per claims 1-2 and 7, Tanaka discloses a client to be registered; registering the client and assigning it a unique user ID; a key distribution center for generating a provisioning key associated with the user ID; generating configuration parameters for initializing the client, the provisioning key being included in the configuration parameters; and upon initialization the client provides its public key (see column 4 lines 2-29).

Tanaka fails to disclose the use of a provisional (or intermediate) server.

However, Doonan et al teaches the use of an intermediary server (see column 4 lines 35-37 where a web site is held on a web server) and storing the public key or generating a certificate (see column 4 lines 41-57).

At the time of the invention it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art to use Doonan et al's intermediary server in the key distribution center of Tanaka.

Motivation to do so is that registration (or enrollment) processes are typically implemented as a web site (see Doonan et al (column 4 lines 35-37).

4. Claims 3-5 and 8-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over the modified Tanaka and Doonan et al system as applied to claims 1 and 7 above, and further in view of Kohl (RFC 1510).

As per claims 3-4 and 8, the modified Tanaka and Doonan et al fails to disclose the use of tickets.

However, Kohl teaches the use of tickets (see page 16).

Art Unit: 2137

At the time of the invention it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art to use the tickets of Kohl in the modified key distribution system of Tanaka and Doonan et al.

Motivation to do so would have been to provide authentication to the system (see page 1).

As per claims 5 and 9, the modified Tanaka, Doonan et al and Kohl system discloses a ticket granting ticket obtained with an AS Request that is authenticated using a public key previously registered with the provisioning ticket, the ticket granting ticket used by the client for obtaining further tickets from the KDC, where each further ticket is used for obtaining access to a particular server (see Kohl page 16).

5. Claim 6 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over the modified Tanaka and Doonan et al system as applied to claim 1 above, and further in view of FOLDOC.

As per claim 6, the modified Tanaka and Doonan et al system fails to disclose the client provides a host identifier that uniquely identifies a computer on which the client application is running.

However, FOLDOC teaches such a unique host identifier (see page 1).

Art Unit: 2137

At the time of the invention it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art to use the IP address of FOLDOC in the modified Tanaka and Doonan et al system.

Motivation to do so would have been to uniquely identify the host.

Conclusion

6. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Young et al (US 6122742) discloses a key distribution center with a registration authority, Albanese et al (US 6002768) discloses a key distribution center with registration and Chen et al (US 5784463) discloses token distribution and registration.
